1. The use of the telephone system for conferences has been started by the railroad communications, power communications, and postal communications departments of the Chinese Communist Government and by municipal organizations of principal cities in China. This measure is designed to reduce waste of time and is limited to use by administrative organizations, who are permitted to discuss unclassified information at these meetings. This measure has been instituted on a trial basis. Military organizations have not yet been authorized to use it.
2. The procedure for holding such a conference usually involves the initiating organization writing a memorandum concerning the subjects to be discussed and indicating the organizations which will participate. The initiating organization is responsible for the conduct of the conference.
